Karen Jackson, Water Resources Specialist, WSP

Angela Vandelay, Senior Engineer, WSP

Lexington County has more than 700 post-construction stormwater control structures, or SCSs, in its MS4 that treat stormwater runoff from impervious areas. Although the County's Land Development Manual requires all SCSs to be inspected and maintained annually, the county has for many reasons historically struggled ensuring they are maintained. Many had become so overgrown they were barely visible. Lexington County developed a database of SCSs across the MS4, providing annual mailings to private pond owners reminding them of annual inspection and maintenance requirements. The newly developed Stormwater BMP Editor App in ArcGIS Online allows the county to track inspection and maintenance progress and identify where enforcement is needed. Learn more about what the team has learned from the program.

Noon – 12:50 p.m.   Lunch

12:50 – 1:00 p.m.   A Word From Our Sponsor: Crumpler Plastic Pipe

1:00 – 1:15 p.m.   SC Department of Health and Environmental Control Updates

Lauren Alston, Engineering Technician, Aiken County

Michaela Canady, Environmental Technician, City of North Augusta

Rachael Osborne, Stormwater Compliance Environmental Project Specialist, Columbia County, GA

Stormwater does not now state or county boundaries, so the connectivity between stormwater regulators and educators should be just as fluid. Learn how stormwater staff across the Central Savannah River Area, or CSRA, are reviving a preexisting network of that includes counties from both Georgia and South Carolina, and how they meet as an organization to discuss compliance issues, program hiccups, regulations, educational events and all other aspects of stormwater management. Attendees will also get an in-depth look at the CSRA's Stormwater Awareness Week that takes place each September and includes events and workshops celebrating stormwater education for people in both states.

2:00 p.m.   Adjourn
