Speaker

Tamara Rodriguez, Senior Risk Management Consultant, Antum Risk

Tamara Rodriguez found her passion for occupational safety and health more than 15 years ago when she joined the South Carolina Occupational Safety and Health Administration as a general industry compliance officer. After gaining additional experience in a broad range of industries through her certified safety and health official role, she sought out opportunities to grow the depth and breadth of her formal safety knowledge through advanced-level coursework. She became an industrial hygienist in compliance and finally a highly sought-after outreach trainer for SCOSHA's Office of Voluntary Programs.

After spending 10 years with SCOSHA, she moved on to be the safety manager with Richland County government, where she was responsible for the development and implementation of a comprehensive occupational safety and health program for more than 2,000 employees spread out over 107 sites. She spearheaded the expansion of the Risk Management Department, led a dynamic team of safety professionals, and was integral in the development of a now proprietary software system used to identify, report, and track remediation of occupational hazards to completion. The new reporting system along with multiple safety initiatives, including county council proclamations focused on employee safety, resulted in substantial decreases in recordable injuries and helped to make all county personnel partners in workplace safety.

Rodriguez joined Antum Risk in 2019, providing risk management consulting services to clients within the healthcare industry. She works to help them reduce risks in the area of workers' compensation, focusing on employee safety and leveraging data used to track and trend injuries to aid in senior management's understanding of the return on investment. She helps clients develop their safety initiatives and provides safety and health training, onsite assessments, in depth data analysis, mock inspections, and resources to ensure they are aware of trending topics as well as changes within the occupational safety and health space.

Rodriguez has been a member of American Society of Safety Professionals since 2016 and was awarded her certified safety professional designation in 2018 and certified instructional trainer designation in 2022. She is an authorized OSHA 10/30 trainer for both general industry and construction.
